7. ALTERNATIVE DISPUTE RESOLUTIONS (ADR)

Alternative Dispute Resolution (ADR) is a term generally used to refer to informal dispute resolution process in which the parties meet with a professional third party who helps them resolve their dispute in a way that is less formal and often more consensual than is done in the courts. While the most common form of ADR are mediation and arbitration.

When a civil case is instituted in court of a competent jurisdiction for recover of money from the defaulter(s), a long time is taken to serve the process, the case takes several years to reach a settlement date. ADR refers to the means of settling dispute or recover money without going through legal procedures i.e. the ultimate purpose of ADR system is closing the enmity between parties and restoration of harmony. Negotiation, Mediation and Arbitration are the most common feature of ADR in Bangladesh, we use the instrument according to the nature of the case or parties.

As the existing legal system of Bangladesh is extremely as formal but complex, time consuming and financial draining. Banks and Financial Institution gather bitter experiences from the above circumstances. ADR is an effective means of resolving dispute in an amicable cost effective manner where by fractured relationship would be restored where de-Jure Law Chamber would like to contribute by maintain a high standard of professionalism.
